Imagine learning Chinese, going to live in China and becoming a movie star there. Crazy? Maybe. Exciting? Absolutely! But that’s what Kyle Rothstein, 17, has done. Kyle is American but lives in China. He grew up speaking English but now speaks Chinese fluently. He’s also one of the stars of a Chinese film. And important people want to meet him.

Kyle grew up in San Francisco, in California. His father doesn’t speak Chinese but has always done a lot of business in China. That’s why he decided to send Kyle to San Francisco’s Chinese American International School, where he also learned Chinese. Kyle says he hated going there at first but quickly realized how lucky he was. “I think every kid should learn a second language,” says Kyle. “It helps you to communicate and opens your mind to other cultures”.

When Kyle was six, he started visiting China with his dad. He also started going to San Francisco’s famous Chinatown and speaking with Chinese visitors. He became so well known around the city that famous people wanted to meet him. Kyle met George Bush Sr. when the ex-president visited Chinatown. Kyle says, “Meeting famous people is always great. I’ll never forget when I met President Bill Clinton in China in 1998.”

Since he was 13, Kyle has lived in Shanghai with his father and sister. Twice a year, he visits his mother in San Francisco. Kyle sees many cultural differences between the US and China. “Chinese people usually live in the same house as their parents and grandparents. And Chinese kids study after school more than American teens do.” But the two countries aren’t as different as you might think. “A lot of Americans think China is just the home of Kung Fu and old culture. But Shanghai has as many lights as New York and Las Vegas do. It’s very modern.”

Speaking Chinese isn’t the only thing that makes Kyle different. He’s danced with the famous San Francisco Ballet Company. When he was ten, he acted in a Chinese TV series. And Kyle worked with British actor Ralph Fiennes in Shanghai on the 2005 film The White Countess. Kyle is also the star of a Chinese movie called Milk & Fashion – about a foreign boy who goes to Shanghai to become a dancer. This is the first film in which non-Asian actors speak Chinese in the main roles. Kyle says, “I worked 16 to 18 hours a day. It was really hard.” In the future, Kyle plans to be a businessman – like his father is. He doesn’t know yet whether he’ll live in China or in the US. “I’ll probably travel a lot between both countries,” Kyle says.

Kyle has been learning Chinese since he was five. Here are his top language-learning tips:

- Talk to native English speakers.
- Visit an English-speaking country.
- Watch TV and films in English.
- Write down new words and try to remember them.
- Don’t be afraid to make mistakes.

Fact file: Shanghai and China

Shanghai
- has more than 20 million people.
- is China’s largest city. Tourists love it for its great food and shopping.
- is one of the world’s busiest ports.
- is on China’s eastern coast. Its name means “on the sea”.
- is the centre of Chinese filmmaking.

China
- Beijing is China’s capital. It was called Peking until 1949. The Summer Olympic Games took place there in August 2008.
- The Great Wall is one of the biggest tourist attractions of northern and central China. When work began, around 200 BC, 70 per cent of China’s population helped to build it.

6 ROLE PLAY: MOVIE STARS

Work in pairs for this role play.

Choose a two or three minute sequence of a DVD in which two characters are speaking. Watch and listen to this sequence in English with the English subtitles on. Then play the sequence again but with the sound off. You and your partner should each play one of the roles and say the lines. Read the subtitles of the screen at first. Practise until you are fluent then act out your sequence in front off your class.
